SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS OF NATURAL GAS.

"How long will Lexington have natural gas?" repeated George W. Church, the expert from Pittsburgh. "I should say at least fifty years. Some of our people think the fields we are now working are good for seventy-five years. You see, in the early stages of the development, you Lexington people were supplied from shallow wells in Eastern Kentucky. Now you are tapping West Virginia wells as deep as 3,200 feet. Why, we are now sinking a well in Pennsylvania that will probably go 8,200 feet." Mr. Church has been at the Phoenix for some time.—Lexington Leader.

IT'S UP TO THE DEMOCRATS.

The present session of the State Legislature promises to be a most interesting one. There is much work to be done, many knotty problems to be met and solved. Chief of these, probably, is the enormous deficit which burdens the commonwealth. Whether this unfortunate debt has been the logical outgrowth of our antiquated system of taxation, or whether the creation of a multiplicity of offices is responsible is to be determined. Both, we believe, were contributory causes, which may be removed, in a measure, by thoughtful legislation.

Whether it be just or not, much blame for the condition of the State's finances is being laid at the doors of the present Administration. It would be well for the Democratic members to bear this in mind throughout the session, giving their best thought and energies to the formulation of corrective measures, the accomplishment of which will serve party and State alike, silence the claims of extravagance being made by the opposition, and destroy the only available "thunder" of the Republicans.

At the risk of being deemed a "calamity howler" we predict that any failure of the Democratic Legislature to accomplish needed reforms will make rough sledding for the party in the next gubernatorial race. We hope that every member, regardless of party, will realize his responsibility to the State; we trust that every Democratic member will realize that, in promoting wise legislation, he will be serving the Commonwealth and his party as well. —Carlisle Mercury.

DICTIONARY INCREASES FOUR WORDS A DAY.

London.—Four new words are added to the English language every day, if the dictionaries may be accepted as a standard of measurement. During the last three centuries the rate of growth of the dictionaries has been 1500 words a year.

In 1616 John Bullokar, the first English lexicographer published his "Complete English Dictionary," with 5080 words. During the later nineteenth century the "Imperial Dictionary" was issued with 200,000 words, and the "Century Dictionary," with a still larger number, followed in 1894 by Dr. Isidor Funk's "Standard Dictionary," containing 318,000. There have been several editions of this, but the one soon to appear will eclipse them all. This will contain 450,000 words.

HIS EMERGENCY TRIGGER.

Developments may cause Mr. Hobson to switch his campaign issue from prohibition back to the Japanese question.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Reliable reports from Mexico are to the effect that cattle on the ranches, foodstuffs in the stores, resources in the vaults of the banks, are almost gone. If peace should come tomorrow and if all the Mexicans should go at once to productive occupations, a lifetime work would be necessary to put Mexico back on the basis she occupied when Madero was murdered by Huerta and his allies.

That is what Mexico has spent in a year and a half and what her people must repay through a generation of hard work. It is a replica of the history of every country that has carried on its shoulders the burden and the curse of war. It is half a century since the United States had a war of any consequence, and yet sixty per cent. of our revenue goes in the payment of war bills—pensions, interest on war debts, the support of an army and navy.

Most of us are prone to complain sometimes because it costs so much to maintain an army and navy as a guarantee of continued peace, but when we stop for a moment to contemplate the heavy burden of old wars, we can not question the intelligence of a policy that would insure against new wars.—Owensboro Messenger.

Lochinvar's Loss.

There are others fairer may be;
Lay your head upon my chest;
You alone shall be my baby—
Nothing, love, shall you molest.

(Being the true story of how Lochinvar Smiddles became a woman hater.)

The rain suddenly and without warning, came down in sheets! Blankets! Bolsters! There was no such thing as running between the drops.

Lochinvar Smiddles, the only human being in sight with an umbrella, walked along dryly in conscious superiority, privately aware of envious glances from pedestrians tramped under awnings and crowding the doorways.

Suddenly, hurrying along in the downpour, Lochinvar, described the fair form of an umbrellaless girl. Even in that drenching rain she was dazzling to the eyes. Lochinvar hurried forward.

"Excuse me and I beg your pardon," he said, lifting his hat, "but as I have an umbrella that is plenty big enough for two, I hope you will not regard it as a familiarity if—"

The girl smiled sweetly, a smile that deserves a whole chapter in itself and will get it, thus:

II.

The girl smiled sweetly.

III.

But unexpectedly and all at once her smile hardened.

"Lemme see that umbrella!" she demanded, and seized the handle. "It is, it is! It's the one I left in the dentist's waiting room. Would you mind telling me how—"

"Why, you see," stammered Lochinvar, "of course, one never can tell, this is, I may have—"

"Crook!" she hissed, and, wresting the umbrella from him, strode athletically away and left him in the drenching, pouring rain.

And ever after Lochinvar Smiddles was a confirmed woman hater.—Louisville Times.

2-Reels—2

Under the Snow

(By Dr. A. G. Browning of Maysville, Being a True Story Stranger Than Fiction.)

CHAPTER II.
In the night-time or the day-time he'd sally brave and well, though the summer lark was singing or the frozen lances fell; knowing if he won the battle, they would praise their Master's name, knowing if he lost the battle, then the doctor was to blame."

But not this time: the doctor's wife was ill, and to go miles into the country, though never so urgent, could not be thought of.

For the self-same reason that I dropped pick and shovel on that rugged mountain side in California—more exactly, in the absence of any reason whatever, standing a test, I mechanically moved below and offered my services—expressed my determination to go.

I think the doctor, with cause, regarded me a lunatic. I gained his instant consent however; secured his wraps, horse and equipments, got my bearings and started afresh upon a phantom journey.

Once outside, 'twas cold to last degree of human endurance, but grandly beautiful—a typical winter night. My guide, of whom I'd gotten but a shadowy glance, climbed awkwardly to saddle, gruffly bade me follow, and was full fifty yards away before I settled to work, making tracks after him.

With one exception, that proved my nearest approach to him thereafter. A "will of the wisp?" he came and went upon my horizon—up one hill, down another—in very mockery, a "mumble-chatter in the trench than obser-vance."

We had gone perhaps half our distance: the cold was fearful and freezing; though a "forty niner" I was getting enough.

As if to arouse or reanimate, the doctor's frisky little mount suddenly shied, snorted, wheeled around and was "homeward bound" before I was in command. Forcing him about, the antics were repeated, in most non-professional way surely: 'twas becoming monotonous; a very little, under circumstances, was abundance.

Prayers for such occasions had not been devised; else I'd failed to do this was one, and pressing.

My phantom guide came back at this juncture, for reasons unknown. I rapidly explained that a man was dying near by, and earnestly begged his assistance.

"Dying?"

With that, the horror of it was too much for words, he honked on his mile, and was gone! I never saw him more, nor heard aught of his midnight mission.

Frosting myself, and the poor creature at my feet essentially frozen; midnight and alone; the surroundings as strange and dismal as a far away gulf in the Sierras! It called for all there was of man, doctor, or whatnot.

A yell, somehow generated, found vent, and vigorously! An echo came in mocking response. But I yelled again—kept on yelling: yelled for life and all there was in it—for myself and the freezing mortal beside me! I was growing fearfully, dangerously cold!

Fearful as was the situation there came a touch of humor, the sense of it not yet frozen. With my first trans-continental shout, dogs began to bark; horses to neigh; cattle to bellow; cocks to crow; owls to hoot—the whole animal world, caught napping on guard, seemed tumbling to make amends. The racket universal provoked a smile; mixed!

From it all came a human voice—saw one, the very sweetest falling upon my ear, to date! My horse heard and responded with appreciative neigh.

Several generous fellows quickly came and we soon got the unfortunate upon his feet—into feeble motion, at which, with vigorous but kindly thumping we kept him.

In moving about we turned up a typical bottle of the devil's own brew—a bottle of whiskey! Minus enough to explain the situational diagnosis; drunk and freezing, "Under The Snow."

All the same, we forced down the remainder, soon as he could swallow. Nor did we think of shunlin simibus curantur: we were out for results, not interesting theories.

We soon had him beneath a friendly roof, between blankets and outside some needed nourishment. With this he bid fair to tide over this close call; take his place in line again, and fulfill his destiny, as allotted.

The me, the incident was one of many. To rescue a life in extremis was

Three hundred and sixty five bushels of Red Clover purchased, will cost $9.00 per bushel, 90 bushels Alsike Clover will cost $10.50 per bushel and 20 bushels of Mammoth Clover, $9.25 per bushel.

The price being for immediate acceptance and the deal closed, no more checks for seed will be accepted.

The R. A. Holden Company will sack each order separate, with tag attached stating amount of seed and name of member.
